Subject: RE: DFT clarification (bollards/temporary signs/school signs).

Good morning Gary

Thank you for your email.

- These bollards are not authorised or compliant with TSRGD.
- If a neighbouring school does not install these, a driver will think it is okay to park on the markings at that school.
- The school can spread the no parking message to parents via communications to the pupils.
- Enforcement can enable change.
- If one of these bollards falls over and injures a pupil or damages a vehicle, a legal issue arises.
- There is no such thing as 'temporary educational signs'.
- A driver could intentionally drive into one of these and the local authority will be in trouble for placing an "illegal obstruction in the highway".
- Any sign/marketing intended for drivers must comply with TSRGD or be specially authorised.

I hope this reply is helpful.

With regards
Ashraf
